He also says that data from the Danish Meteorological Institute show that the volume of sea ice is "now tracked above all recent years" and "may reach a record 30 years". However, 2021 is far from being a record ice year, in the Arctic.According to models from the Danish Meteorological Institute, "the volume of sea ice has generally decreased from 2000 to now", Mads Hvid Ribergaard, the institute's oceanographer, told USA TODAY in an e-mail.The photos show no change in sea level in 99 years, but they don't deny climate change. Because sea ice fluctuates seasonally, researchers who monitor change in ice cover or volume must explain the time of year. However, it was still much smaller than the levels seen in the early 2000s. Arctic ice shrinkage is a trend that goes back decades, according to records from NASA and the National Snow and Ice Data Center.Satellite monitoring since the late 1970s shows the ice cover of the Arctic sea during the minimum extent has decreased by about 13% each decade, says NASA on its website.And the pattern is maintained throughout the year.Special access for subscribers!Click here to subscribe to our verification text chat "The last 15th of September show the lowest values".In the 1980s, the minimum extent of Arctic sea ice usually covered an area offree A little smaller than Australia, according to Walt Meier, a scientist at the National Snow and Ice Data Center.
